Lyla Payne I close my eyes for a brief second, then smile wider. Glinda's granddaughter is a friend of mine, and she asked me to come grab her grandma's jewelry box. "Hm." He glances at Cooter, who's pretending not to listen to us.

and a stepstool with her name carved into the top, a gift from Grandma Audrey. I'd let her stand beside me on her stepstool and dump the cheese powder I did the dishes and wiped off the kitchen counters, listening for his feet on the sprinting down the homestretch of Lyla's latest adventure, happily lost in her world.
